The office design for Ofload's new headquarters in Sydney proves just how much working environments influence productivity. Here, the special requirements of the employees were taken into account and the furnishings were implemented accordingly. Included: the NEBA carpet tile from ANKER, which is an essential part of the multi-award-winning design concept.

As a digital end-to-end freight partner, Ofload supports transport companies in transporting and delivering goods more transparently and efficiently – intending to create a zero-waste transport landscape in Australia. It is therefore hardly surprising that a design concept was to be implemented for the heritage-listed new headquarters that reflects both this mission and the company's dynamic working culture. In addition, the space needed to be inviting and progressive – combined with the energetic and stylish essence of a New York City downtown loft.

As communication is free within the team – even across departments – an open, transparent interior design that accommodates work-flows was key. The designers at Concept CI therefore created a modern office using natural textures and recycled materials: Exposed walls and exposed wooden beams are pleasantly juxtaposed with graffiti art and neon lights. Large glass surfaces, natural lighting, and a warm, neutral color palette with green accents soften the industrial character of the space. A wide variety of meeting points and meeting options have been integrated into the open space for uncomplicated collaboration – from formal to informal.

The NEBA flooring from ANKER fits perfectly into this concept. The tufted loop pile carpet tile harmonizes visually with the interior thanks to its organic-looking texture. Thanks to the pile and color of the carpet tiles (colors 571 and 576), the textile floor covering loosens up the room structures in a collaborative sense and allows for a wide variety of zoning in the loft office: stylishly playful, sustainable, and effective. An ideal prerequisite for creativity in everyday working life.

“NEBA from ANKER was the ideal solution to meet the requirements of Ofload: a sustainable carpet tile with a natural, organic texture that fits perfectly into the overall concept in terms of color.”
